Subject: RE: (E13611) Exxon Pipeline Mayflower Oil Spill - Update
Date: Friday, April 26, 2013 11:56:18 AM

22 homes continue to be evacuated.

420 response personnel are currently responding to the incident. Rain is expected today, tonight and tomorrow across the area.

The focus of the response continues to be on Bell Cove and the North Woods subdivision along N. Starlite Road.

Cleanup crews continue to remove brush from Bell Cove, work edge water areas, and change out boom and sorbent materials. Water levels in Bell Cove continue to remain artificially high to assist with operations.

Exxon's storm drain removal project continues within the impacted neighborhood. Along with the storm drain removal, crews are removing and replacing the municipal drinking water service main that lies in the same ditch as the storm sewer.

Yesterday, EPA performed ambient air monitoring at two residential properties in response to citizen complaints. No elevated readings were observed in either location. Constituents measured included VOC's, H2S and Benzene.

EPA is reducing the amount of deployed resources. Planning and PIO positions will be demobilizing today as will the mobile command post.

EPA has ceased all air monitoring. Air monitoring will only be conducted if there is a complaint or as part of the re entry process.

Senator Pryor is scheduled to tour the site on Monday 4/29. The plan includes touring the North Woods subdivision and potentially having lunch with displaced residents. No media outlet invitations have been sent out for this event.

On Saturday 4/26, a sign making event is scheduled to occur at the Library by a local Faulkner County citizens group (per social media post).

Monday is the one month anniversary of the spill. A local Faulkner County citizens group is organizing a peaceful rally at Pierce Park, near city hall in Mayflower. The event slogan is purported to be: "Stand with Mayflower—No to Keystone".
